Tell us what you think! Complete our Needs Assessments On-Line or by mail.

Link Child Care Resource and Referral is conducting surveys to better improve our services. There are four different surveys:

- People using or in need of child care services. (Contact Cristie Dunbar)
- People in need of Pre-School or School-Age services. (Contact Cristie Dunbar)
- Providers of child care services (Contact Dante Jeter)
- People in need of Training Services (Contact Nikki Rabel)

Please either go to www.rvcds.org (see information on bottom right hand side of web page) and choose the survey which best describes you OR if you do not have internet access, contact the person listed next to the survey you would like to complete and we will be glad to mail you a copy. We will use this information to help improve the services we offer! Thank you for your help with this.

Behavior Consultant Corner

The Golden Rule. Remember it? It is phrased in different ways, in different cultures and religions, but the premise is the same: treat others as you would like them to treat you. As a child it seems each time I was angry or selfish, my grandmother would say, in a gentle voice, "Is that how you want others to treat you?" Who does the golden rule apply to? Sadly, it often seems it does not apply to children. Many adults say children must respect them, yet those same adults show little regard for a child's thoughts, feelings or sense of Independence. We can do better!

Here is a fact: children learn a tremendous amount by observing and imitating others. Simply put, children watch the behavior of others (adults and children), decide if the behavior is worthwhile, and use it if they perceive it is (they get it wrong a lot.) We are models for the children.

I have heard multi-millionaire athletes say, "I am not a role-model" What they mean is "don't make me responsible". But, again, the fact is we are all role-models, positive or negative, and we are certainly not worth a million dollars if we are not good ones. We do not decide to be role-models. Children choose. From Super-heroes to the most hardened criminal, each is someone's role model, For better or worse. Meditate on that, give it time to sink in, and consider our responsibility to this world's children. If you were a child, how would you like to be treated by adults? Kindness? Friendliness? Firm limits that keep you safe? Consequences for mistaken behaviors that teach responsibility thereby preparing you for an adulthood that, barring tragedy, is certainly coming. Clear rules that you understand. Acceptance. Compliment and acknowledgement for the good thing you do. A hug when fearful and a smile when successful. Yes, you want these things even now, as I do.

Respect? Ah yes, respect, the word that I hear so often. Just my opinion, but I challenge anyone to legitimately disprove it. If we do not model respect, we shall not obtain it, and certainly do not deserve it.

CHILDREN NEED TO EXERCISE REGULARLY

Brandon does the bunny hop twice and stops. He would rather watch the other children. Brandon is overweight. Wendy has high cholesterol. Her provider can't believe that a child as young as Wendy could have this problem. Juan never charges around the play yard with the other kids. He says he would rather watch.

Almost half of American children are not getting enough exercise to develop healthy hearts and lungs. The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends more physical education programs at the preschool and primary level, and they suggest families promote fitness at home.

Most of us believe that preschoolers are always active. Research has found, however, that children spend very little time exercising vigorously. Children who are overweight or inactive are the least likely to participate in vigorous exercise. These children are at special risk.

People who work with young children are usually more concerned about language development, science projects, and art than with developing large motor skills. Although providers often urge children to participate in indoor activities, outside time is often viewed as free play. Providers are apt to set up the slide or put out the tricycles and then stand by and watch. They rarely encourage the children to take part in gross motor activities, even though fitness is vital to good health.

Children imitate adult behavior, and children with active parents are usually active themselves. Providers can be good role models, too. Get involved in the activities you plan for them. If children see you running, jumping, climbing, dancing, and exercising, they will probably join in.

Build an activity plan for large-muscle physical activity, just as you would for art and science. Here are some ideas.

- Help children do warm-up routines that include stretching, flexing, and balancing. Make sure the exercises you select are suitable for small children. Draw attention to their bodies. Get them to feel their muscles, enjoy their flexibility, and compare tight muscles with relaxed ones.
- Present exercise in ways that will interest children. Plan active games, dancing, group exercises, and relay races.
- Start with very brief activities so that overweight or inactive children can succeed.
- Be sure that children participate on the playground, especially the ones who need it most.
- Plan daily physical activities for providers and children to do together. Plan to jog or walk around the block once or twice before going to the playground. Or you could exercise to music each morning. Start slow and work up to 10 minutes.
- Combine music and movement every day. Give children the chance to be a jet plane, a galloping horse, or a speeding train.
- Set up obstacle courses designed for your age group.
- Require children to participate in gross motor play, just as you require them to wash their hands after using the toilet.

It's hard to break old habits, but you can help children get into the exercise habit early. This habit will pay off both now and later for providers, children, and their families.

If you are interested in becoming a mentor and have completed ACDS or have a degree in early childhood or a related field, this is an opportunity for you. The training is Sept. 29 in Beckley. Please contact Sherrie Barrett at 523 0433 ext. 404 for more information.

If you are a graduate of ACDS, then you are a Journeyperson and are entitled to attend the next ACDS Journeyperson's seminar. It will be held on Oct. 14 in Flatwoods. Please contact Suzi Brodof at 523 0433 ext. 406 for more information.

Children Learn What They Live

If children live with criticism, they learn to condemn.
If children live with hostility, they learn to fight.
If children live with fear, they learn to be apprehensive.

If children live with pity, they learn to feel sorry for themselves.

If children live with ridicule, they learn to feel shy.
If children live with jealousy, they learn to feel envy.
If children live with shame, they learn to feel guilty.
If children live with encouragement, they learn confidence.

If children live with tolerance, they learn patience.
If children live with praise, they learn appreciation.
If children live with acceptance, they learn to love.
If children live with approval, they learn to like themselves.

If children live with recognition, they learn it is good to have a goal.

If children live with sharing, they learn generosity.
If children live with honesty, they learn truthfulness.

If children live with fairness, they learn justice.
If children live with kindness and consideration, they learn respect. If children live with security, ---they learn to have faith in themselves and in those about them.

If children live with friendliness, they learn the world is a nice place in which to live.

Attention Boone, Logan and Mingo Family Child Care Providers

Would you like to be a part of a new Family Child Care Association being developed in your area? Please come to our next meeting at Kiddie Kollege in Logan on Saturday October 7, 2006 at 1:00. The purpose of this Child Care Association is to support registered providers and the families they serve, create public awareness, create a network of providers that could serve as role models for new providers and share professional knowledge and expertise in the area of child development by providing guest speakers and addressing specific topics.

Please come and enjoy yourself by supporting other providers who support children through love and commitment of quality child care. We want to bring professional standards to all providers caring for our children. A training on "Family Child Care Environments" (see training calendar on page 5) will be held from 11:00-1:00 on the same day. This meeting will immediately follow the training. If you would like to attend this meeting, please call Kathy Meadows at 1-800-894-9540.
